DEMOCRATIC REJOICINGS.

Ratification of the Nominations of Seymour and Blair.

Speeches by Wade Hampton and Ex-Governors Vance and Perry.

Shortly after the nominations were made for the Shortly after the nominations were made for the Presidency and Vice Presidency by the Convention Disters were issued announcing that a ratification neeting of Seymour and Blair would be held in front of the club room of the Democratic Association, at Union square, in the evening, which would be addressed by General Wade Hampton and other disvery large assemblage was gathered in front of the building, which was illuminated with paper lamps,

The first speaker was Mr. A. J. ROGERS, who aid:-Some of the most distinguished men in this ountry have agreed to be here to-night to address u. We have assembled for the purpose of ratifying which have been made this day-nomina-which, I believe, will inspire more thusiasm into the American people than that hich was inspired into them by the nomination of neral Grant; because it is a fact that although the radical party has had other candidates in the the radical party has had other candidates in the Beld some month or two, if we did not look into the newspapers for information we would not know that any candidates of theirs were running at all. No excitement has been created, no cannons have been fired, scarcely any ratification meeting throughout the country has been held, from the simple fact that the country has been held, from the simple fact that the people of this country have determined that the time has come when they must change the course of war and strife to the avenues and paths of peace and happiness. We have now nominated for your consideration and your votes a statesman—a man who has been taught to revere and honor the constitution of his country and the laws of the land; a man who has held the highest position in the gift of the people of New York; a man whose political record has been well known and one on which every democrat can safely repose, and around which every conservative republican who wants to bury radical rule and perpetuate civil liberty can safely rally. (Applause.) We have entered to-day on the onward march in favor of the constitution and the old Union—in favor of the Dailon that we had under democratic rule, the Union that was made by our fathers, the one that was made by Washington, Jefferson, Madison and the other sages and heroes of the Revolution; the Union which constitutes the thirty-seven coequal States, each having the power within its own sovereign to legislate and control upon its own internal affairs according to its own will. We have determined by this nomination and by the platform which was framed for the people to vote upon that this government of ours is a federal government, that these States of ours are alworeign States, and that hereafter when a stemocratic President and Vice President shall take their places—as they will on the 4th of March next—the sovereignty of the States and the sovereignty of the States and the sovereignty of the supreme law of the land. We have nominated a gentleman, gentlemen, that has a holicy, and the doctrines of the democratic party that whey adhered to in former times upon great fundamental principles that lay at the foundation of the government are reiterated and reaffirmed in that platform, and they are to be rehaptized in the coming election by the most overwhelming democra ple of this country have determined that the time

Me country as our candidate Horatio Seymour, New York's favorite son, who two years ago gave 50,000 majority to the democratic party. Beside him, as a nivilian, we have for Vice President a candidate who is not only a military man and a hero, but who is also a civilian and a statesman—Frank Biair, of Missouri—a man who has ever stood by the cardinal principles of the democratic party, a man whose name is enrolled among the most honorable, who fought in favor of the constitution and of the Union; a man who imperilled his life, his limbs and his property for the perpetuation of the meritage of liberty which Washington and our fathers bequeathed to us. He is the man whom the democratic party have put in nomination, not only to represent the military, but the civil power. With him and the standard bearer Horatio Seymour success is certain if the democratic party only do their duty. How is that duty to be performed? It is by every man in this country, who has any love for it, to make himself a working politician during this campaign, and so determine that the city of New York, whose record has always been a proud democratic triumph, shall, instead of giving sixty-two thousand majority, as alse did last fall for the State ticket, roll up for Horatio Seymour ninety thousand majority, that the interior of the State may go out with the glad tidings ratio Seymour ninety thousand majority, that the interior of the State may go out with the giad tidings along the telegraphic wires that the Empire State has given one hundred thousand majority in favor of democratic principles and constitutional law. We do not ask the suffrages of the American people for Horatio Seymour occause he has the ability to fight, not because he is a butcher, nor because he is in favor of military law, but because he is a statesman and a safe guardian of the constitution, around whom the American people can raily and safely place their confidence, with the assurance that the principles which heretofore governed the country before the radicals came into power will continue to govern it under him. The speaker went on to say that the Convention did not repudiate the constitution of the United States, but pledged itself to support that instrument, while the platform upon which General Grant stood pledged him to support the Declaration of American independence and ignore the constitution of the United States. The leaders of the radical party proclaimed that they were outside of the constitution of the United States. The leaders of the radical party proclaimed that they were outside of the constitution of the United States. They had made the unlitary independent of the civil power, and eight millions of white men, women and children of the Southwere held in bondage and despotism. Logo over the South and catch the waitings of thousands of insane women who were raped and murdered by negro minions sustained by the despoism of this radical Congress to do this bloody work. Let your stalwart arms be nerved by the rich blessings which once hung over this country under democratic rule, and remember that when you vote for Horatio Seymour and Frank Blair the day on which you cast that you will be one dedicated to your country and will be in favor of handing down to your children the heritage of civil liberty which was bequeathed to you through the constitution of recognition in Phinadelphia, in 125, ratio Seymour ninety thousand majority, that the interior of the State may go out with the giad tidings

SPECH OF WADE HAMPTON.

General WADE HAMPTON having arrived, came out appon the balcony and was loudly applicated. He spoke as follows:

FRILOW CITIZENS OF NEW YORK—I am violating a rule that I imposed on myself when I came on here in addressing you, in speaking at all; but that I do violate it is due solely to the people of New York, who have met us of the South with such kindness and such cordiality. [At this juncture some of the paper lamps caught fire and efforts were made to extinguish them.] General Hampton (continuing)—I do not like to have a fire in my rear. (Laughter and appliance) Gentlemen, I came, then, solely that I might thank you for the courtesy that you have extended to us and to all the Southern States, and that I might explain to you why it was that we were here and what good we hope may be effected by our presence. It was determined by us when we came on that we would take no part in this Convention—no prominent part—not because we felt that we were not the equais of any other delegates, but solely because we were afraid that we of the South—cck off as we have been for the last few years from the political world—if we should indicate our preferences we might accidentally select men who would bring defeat upon the great democratic party. We determined then that we would let the democracy of the United States, in Convention assembled, indicate who was to be their standard bearer, and then that we would come up in solid phalanx and pledge our firm support to the nominations. Acking upon that, we cast our vote for President of the United States Andrew Johnson, who had stood between us and ruin. (Applause, We wished to, show him that we appreciated that kindness, and to pay him the compliment that was due to him. It was then, seemingly, the wish of the democracy to take the great young statesman of Ohio, and when that appeared to be the case south Ca

State rolled on to swell the grand acclaim, our little Siste came next to your cown and declared that he was their choice emphatically and fully. These, gentlemen, were the company of the course we do, and, if we have been mistaken, I am seek the course we do, and, if we have been mistaken, I am seek the course we do, and, if we have been mistaken, I am seek the course we do, and, if we have been mistaken, I am seek the course we do, and, if we have been mistaken, I am seek the promote the success of the democratic party, and I want you sail to know that if we had been willing to go to the radical party we could have minde any terms that we chose; but we determined to take defeat with the democracy rather than by sacrificing our principles to gain anccess with the radicals. (Applanase,) we believed that if we were true to those principles of the democracy trainer than by sacrificing our principles to gain anccess with the radicals. (Applanase,) we believed that if we were true to those principles of the democratic party, would triumph, and that two would at last be free and delivered from the ruin which has been impending over us. And now, gentlemen, you of the North do not know, you cannot conceive the condition of the Southern States. (A voice, "My God, I can!") I am glad that you can. But I will only state a few facts, for it is a theme upon which I dare not trust myselfto speak. In the Legislature of South Carolina, composed of one hundred and fifty-six members there are nearly if not quite now one hundred negroes. (Hisses and cries of "Shame.") The whole of the taxes that those one hundred and fifty-six members there are nearly if not quite now one hundred of the caxes that those my continue to sever any of the southern States. I the two conservative members, and of the two hundred of the caxes that those one hundred and if of the work of the southern states and a quarter of dollars. Now, gentlemen, if that state of things goes on, what will be the result You know the young the state of things goes on, wha meeting, giving a caustic and severe depiction of the policy pursued by the radicals in aiming at the supremacy of the negro.

Mr. S. S. Cox next came forward and said:—Fellow citizens, I have the honor and pleasure to congratulate you this evening on the unanimous and hearty efforts that have been made in all the States of the country for President and Vice President, and the declaration of principles on which the election was to be carried next November. (Applause.) I think this Convention has called all the good men, North and South, East and West, together. I think that the great doctrine of peace and good will to men, and under such guides as George Washington and Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Johnson, good will to Morth and South will certainly prevail under the great ægis of the democratic party, as to-day they have evinced by their Convention. After Some further remarks the speaker introduced the next speaker.

REMARKS OF GOVERNOR VANCE.

Governor VANCS, of North Carolina, came forward and proceeded to address the meeting. He said if anyone desired to know why he stood before them on that occasion—a man lately engaged in rebellion against the Union of the States—he would answer in a little anecdote. An old negro down in the South was brought up before the Justice, who said to him, "John, I'm mighty sorry to see you here." John replied, "Master, afore de Lord I wouldn't be here if de soldiers hadn't fotched me." (Laughter.) I may say with John that it was the soldiers fotched me. The military despotism of the South brought me here before you. (Cheers.) You might take me, from this admission, to be a damined refei. "He was not content to be tamely subjugated to negro rule.

from this admission, to be a damned recel. He was one of those who accepted the situation; but he was not content to be tamely subjugated to negre rule, as it was to be judged by everis in Dahomey, Haytii as it was to be judged by everis in Dahomey, Haytii as it was to be judged by everis in Dahomey, Haytiin and St. Domingo. He came here to pleas for his home and cought his remarks would be received by them to cought his remarks would be received by them to be a second to the cought his remarks would be received by them to be a second to the them. There was nothing left in his old state of them and a second to the them to the second to th rap/dly approaching. (Cheers.) There were grounds uson which to base that happy supposition. The fadical party were fast declining: their measure a were aiready demonstrated to be obnoxious as well as ruinous to the entire country, and now the criste had arrived to determine whether the just actimize tratiou of the laws, in opposition to tyranny and oppression, effound prevail. (Applause.) He then dwell with considerable earnestmess upon the present government of the Southern States, endorsing the speakers who had already proceed him. Mr. Glick went on to demonstrate the fallacious policy as well as what he considered the apparent oppression which characterized the government of the Southern States, concending that the gradual decline of the once fair and fertile soil of the South, the rich fields and glowing harvests that enriched the world were now almost barren and waste owing to the tyrranulcal sway which prevailed. He explained the object of his coming to New York, which was not to vote particularly for a favorite candidate, but rather to ratify and add strength to the nomination of the democratic party, which he was of opinion had chosen wisely ad well. (Cheers.) Having further in glowing terms adverted to the proceedings of the Convention the speaker withdrew amid applause.

Mr. Jinkins, of North Carolina, was next introduced, his appearance being the signal for a loud burst of approbation. He re-choed the sentiments of the speaker from South Carolina. He, too, begged to congratulate the meeting on the cholee which had been made, confident in the hope that it would be unanimously confirmed by every State in the Union. (Cheers.) Having briefy refered in eulogistic terms to the proceedings of the National Democratic Convention, which he characterized as harmonious in a high degree, he went on to draw a virid picture of the condition of the Southern States, and warmly pointed out the evils by which they were surrounded. Nothing, he said, could be more miserable. Once the pride of the nation, once the boast Seymont to Speak To-Night. At the meeting last evening it was announced by one of the speakers that Mr. Seymour will this evening address the citizens of New York in front of Tammany Hall and publicly accept the nomination of the Democratic Convention for candi-date of the party in the ensuing Presidential cam-paigns.

THE FEELING THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY.

As soon as the news of the nomination of Horatio Seymour for President and General Frank P. Blair for Vice President reached Brooklyn yesterday afternoon, the members of the Democratic General Committee assembled at their headquarters in Court street for the purpose of taking steps to honor the nominations. Two brass cannon were brought from the arsenal to the City Hall Park, where a salute of one hundred guns was fired. Some of the reports were very loud, and the concussion had the effect of breaking several panes of glass in the hall and bringing down a good portion of the ceiling of the portico. The rooms of the Democratic General Committee were thrown open and a large number of Chinese lanterns were strung out in front of the building. The entire democracy of Kings county do not seem to be altogether suited with the nominations. The republicans now feel assured that they will be able to elect Grant and Colfax. The democracy will hold a grand ratification meeting at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Monday next.

CURIOUS BALLOON ACCIDENT IN MASSACHUSETTS.

[From the New Bedford Mercury, July 6.]
The pleasure of the throngs who witnessed it was saily merred by a frightful accident. Unfortunately the police force was unsufficient to Keep the crowd from invading the space appropriated to Mr. Collard and his assistants and a large number of men and and his assistants, and a large number of men and children were about the balloon, though the aeronaut warned them of the danger. Everything was at last ready, the rope to which was attached the grapnel being properly coiled and the latter safely placed in the car; but in some way the gay by which the balloon was held caught and displaced the grapnel, which fell from the car. In its descent it struck upon the flead of a little boy named William Mottrom, belonging in Taunton, fracturing his skull. The rope by which the balloon was held to the earth having been cut the grapnel was dragged along and caught one little French boy, named John Bono under one arm and the chin and another named Charlie Jones on the hip, and both were lifted in the air. For a moment the agony of the spectators was intense. The balloon was ascending in a direct line when Mr. Collard, hearing the cry and seeing the boys suspended, with admirable presence of mind cut the rope with his knife, thus giving the little fellows their only chance of escape. They had reached the alitiude variously estimated at from fifty to eighty feet, but which we are satisfied from Mr. Collard's statement could not have been more than forty feet, and fortunately fell into a tree upon the Common which greatly broke the force of their descent, and thus saved not only their lives but their limbs. Both sanfered from the concussion. They remained insensible for a time, but under careful and skilful medical attention were made comfortable and will undoubtedly both recover.

THE NEW YORK AND NEW HAVEN RAILROAD.

[From the Hartford Courant, July 9.]
At the meeting of the stockholders of the New York and New Haven Railroad Company in New Haven on Tuesday, it was voted to accept the amendment to the charter authorized by the Legislature. The capital stock of the company is therefore to be increased. The directors were instructed "not to issue, sed or dispose of any portion of the increased capital tick of the company, nor to use the proceeds thereof except for the purpose of reasying the road with steel rails, of creeting new repair shops and other necessary buildings in New Haven, of increasing the amount of the equipment, of purchasing the necessary lands for depot purposes in New York city, and erecting thereon the necessary buildings, and of making other permanent improvements." It was also voted that the increased capital stock shall not be issued any farther than the actual expenses make necessary; that the new issue of stock shall be apportioned among the stockholders at its par value, and that the directors shall be suchorized to dispose of any shares not taken by the stockholders within a given time, at the ruling market price, provided that no portion of the stock shall be sold at less than its par value.
